Psychology of the Web and Internet Addiction: Symptomatology and Intervention

Seminar with Ofer Zur, PhD

February 4, 2011

This seminar will review the emerging fields of Psychology of the Internet, Internet Addiction, and Online Gaming. It will focus on the increased tension between parents and children regarding internet use, overuse, and abuse. The fact that parents, by definition, are digital immigrants and children are digital natives creates multi-levels of misunderstanding, miscommunication, and inevitable conflicts. The lecture will discuss the true nature of multitasking, Internet use, overuse, and abuse, and online gaming, and will explore the application of the addiction model to Internet Addiction and Online Gaming Addiction. Additionally, it will provide information about assessment and interventions with those who abuse or become addicted to the Internet or to online gaming.

Goals & Objectives: As a result of attending this seminar, the participant will be able to:

1. Learn scope, causes, assessment and interventions of internet & online gaming addiction
2. Understand of the impacts of technology on stress and ways to create a health positive balance and "cyberwellness" within a technological society
3. Identify ways to address the "digital divide" that often results in conflict between youth and caregivers
