Diversity & Cultural Competency Training

Featured Speaker

Claude Steele, PhD

Claude Steele, PhD, is a renowned social psychologist who is currently the I. James Quillen Dean for the School of Education at Stanford University. Previously, he served as the 21st Provost of Columbia University, as well as a professor of psychology. He is best known for his work on stereotype threat and its application to minority student academic performance. His earlier research focused on the self (e.g. self-image, self-affirmation) as well as the role of self-regulation in addictive behaviors. Dr. Steele has also published articles in numerous scholarly journals and his recent book, Whistling Vivaldi: And Other Clues to How Stereotypes Affect Us and What We Can Do, was published in 2010.

Dr. Steele has held various positions during his 40+ year academic career, including Stanford University's Director of the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences. He has been elected into many distinguished societies such as National Academy of Sciences, and has received numerous fellowships and awards, including the American Psychological Association's Senior Award for Distinguished Contributions to Psychology in the Public Interest and the Distinguished Scientific Contribution Award. Dr. Steele is recognized as a leader in the field of social psychology and for his commitment to the systematic application of social science to problems of major societal significance.

Stereotype Threat: How it affects us and what we can do

Featured Speaker: Claude Steele, PhD

October 11, 2012

This seminar will focus on the theory of stereotype threat, designating a common process through which people from different groups, being threatened by different stereotypes, can have different experiences in the same situation. It will illustrate its application in understanding group differences in performance ranging from the intellectual to the athletic, in a variety of settings such as the workplace and academia. The psychological experience of the individual and, particularly, on the experience of threats to the self and the consequences of those threats will also be discussed along with the concepts of self-image threat, self-affirmation, and its role in self-regulation, the academic under-achievement of minority students, and the role of alcohol and drug use in self-regulation processes and social behavior.

Furthermore, the seminar will reveal interventions and strategies, from a community service provider perspective.

DR STEELE'S BOOK WILL BE AVAILABLE FOR PURCHASE

Goals & Objectives: As a result of attending this seminar, the participant will be able to:

1. Learn the scope of stereotype threat
2. Understand of the impacts of stereotype threat on performance
3. Identify interventions and strategies in addressing stereotype threat
